

Desiree's outdoor collection embodies tactile elegance

Desiree has unveiled its 2025 Outdoor Collection at Salone del Mobile, expanding its refined, sculptural language into open-air living. The new pieces Eben, Kublo, and Daman, are designed to blur the lines between architecture and nature, bringing the brand's understated elegance into terraces, loggias, and gardens.

'They are tactile, sculptural, and full of character. They move gracefully across terraces, loggias and refined gardens,' the brand stated. Desiree's latest launch gives 'form to a warm, essential and deeply material aesthetic, one that speaks to open spaces without ever losing its identity.'

At the heart of the collection is Eben, an outdoor armchair by renowned designers Matteo Thun & Antonio Rodriguez. 'The Eben outdoor armchair turns weaving into a poetic and architectural gesture,' with a handcrafted solid iroko wood frame and a precisely wrapped polyester rope weave. Designed for durability, Eben offers 'excellent resistance to atmospheric agents' and features a removable, water-repellent cushion. Desiree calls it 'a tribute to artisanal tradition,' with a silhouette 'drawn by air and light.'

The Kublo side tables continue this language of tactility and sustainability. 'Designed to live in harmony with nature,' Kublo features rounded forms crafted from eco-mortar, a sustainable material, and comes in soft neutral tones. Their sculptural presence is paired with versatility: 'Available in three heights, they can be freely combined to compose sophisticated and contemporary furnishing landscapes.'

Completing the ensemble is Daman, a handwoven rug made from recycled PET. Its 'irregular texture, melange hues and artisanal look' make it ideal for covered outdoor spaces where texture and tone matter. 'Every detail contributes to a broader vision of beauty, durability and wellbeing,' the company affirms.

With this collection, Desiree reinforces its design ethos of fluidity, 'a kind of design that moves fluidly across thresholds, between indoors and out, between material depth and weightless elegance.'

Desiree Outdoor Collection 2025 is a crafted dialogue between craftsmanship, sustainability, and elemental design, inviting European audiences to experience the serenity of outdoor living, refined.
